Well, these considerations had their light with Miss Vernet, and she had hested before accepting the young lawyer, t his attraction of mind and person oved too much for her worldly wisdom, stipulated that it should be no se to support her in good style.

I course, Frank must needs go away to ek his fortune. He went to Europe. There is a tender parting between the lovers, at high Carolyn was tearful and despondent, ank brave and hopeful.

rank brave and hopeful.
"Don't think of my absence, dearest," he rged cheerfully, "Think of the time when shall return with a fortune to offer you."
"Return when you will, Frank," sobbed arolyn, "you shall find me true. I will alt for you faithfully, dear Frank." Frank Reade went to Europe, and for a onth Carolyn was inconsolable.
However, this did not last long and at er, this did not last long, and at of a month Carolyn had so far reovered from her grief as to accept an in-tation to Mrs. De Smith's soirce. At that soirce she met Albert Reade, that drunate cousin of Frank's. Mr. Reade was a rather good looking man. She saw at once that he was ed to become her adorer. Besides, he till she did not speak to him of Frank; ther did Mr. Reade allude to his cousin, talbert was ignorant of Miss Vernet's gagement to Frank. He began from air first meeting to devote himself to and Miss Vernet, not being blind, estailly to such attentions, did not misse it, yet she did not discourage him. and when occasionally she heard some rt Reade. Of course, you see the sequel, trolyn loved Frank. Under the fasciname of his presence she had yielded her lishness, but now that he was gone, oridiness had resumed its sway, and amtion began to suggest that Albert was a tter match than Frank.

Society," that astute and considerate dy, had long foreseen the event and was had long foreseen the event and was in the least surprised when Miss Ver-authorized the information that she soon to marry Albert Reade, and sociught it a very sensible proceeding arolyn married Albert Reade. The ome thing generally, and somebody cood enough to send to Frank in the a paper containing the marriage. What a crushing blow to all his that notice was he never told any He did not return home, and sowas left to forget or remember him would.

se to remember him, for Carolyn, ng on a ferryboat about two years after marriage, heard a lady and gentleman her side conversing as follows: suppose Maria told you about her nd Frank Reade's good fortune?" ried the lady. No. What about him? I understand ss-Vincent, was it—I suppose. Yes, he take her inconstancy very badly, Maria rs. They say she was a great beauty, d men are silly about a pretty face—beging your pardon, mon ami!"

"Granted," laughed the gentleman. "Pro-Well, you know, as soon as he was eafe-

"Well, you know, as soon as he was sare-out of the way she married a rich man, me relation to Frank Reade, I believe." "Yes: I have heard all about that." "Well, now comes the sequel, Frank went Switzerland on some wild goose chase, and while there saved the life of a certain ch, benevolent, childless gentleman. Well, the benevolent old gentleman insisted on the property to the life of a certain he benevolent old gentieman insisted aking his brave young preserver home England with him. Then he adopted hand now he has capped the climax by ling and leaving his immense fortune conditionally to Frank. Now, won't to the fathless beauty be a bitter pill to the faithless beauty?"

Carolyn heard no more, but she had heard enough, and later the story had pleaty of confirmation. It was a bitter pill to her. But the worst was not yet. In the course of nature Uncle Jenkins died and was buried, and his lawyer came to read the will to the heir presumptive. With serene satisfaction Mr. and Mrs. Reade listened to the following:

"I give and bequeath to my nephew, Albert Reade, all the property of which I die possessed, amounting—"

Here the lawyer paused to wine bis the lawyer paused to wipe his

"Amounting to $5,000, invested in—" etc.
That was all. Uncle Jenkins' apparent wealth had been all a sham, and Carolyn had sold herself for $5,000! She had lost not only a true, loving heart, but what was of more value—a princely fortune!
